Information for Prospective Advocacy Law Alliance Board Members

Thinking of joining a not for profit Board of Management?

The key responsibilities of the Board are:

- to set the direction for the organisation
- to monitor its performance
- to maintain control of the organisation, ensuring that it stays on track according to agreed priorities and planned activities.

The Board does not run the day-to-day activities of ALA; this responsibility is delegated to the Chief Executive Officer.

About Advocacy Law Alliance (ALA)

ALA employs around 80 staff and has an annual budget of approximately $9 million.

ALA takes good governance and management seriously as it believes people with a disability and other disadvantaged people deserve a well-run and professional service. Good governance and management are also required because of the increasing legislative, contractual, legal and ethical standards ALA must meet.

ALA is the governing organisation for two separate programs: Mid North Coast Legal Centre www.mncclc.org.au and Disability Advocacy NSW www.da.org.au .

Our Vision

All people experiencing disadvantage have a right to equality, fairness, and a good quality of life.

Our Mission

ALA provides high quality social/legal advocacy and support to people in need across NSW, with a commitment to servicing regional and remote communities. Our focus is to empower clients to navigate the legal and social systems and achieve fair outcomes in the pursuit of their goals.

ALA History

The story of Advocacy Law Alliance began in Tamworth and Newcastle NSW Australia in 1985.

In Tamworth a small group of locals set up an association to advocate for people with an intellectual disability (Citizen Advocacy Northwest). At the same time in Newcastle a self-advocacy association started in Newcastle. In 1994, Disability Advocacy Service Hunter (DASH) was established in Newcastle to advocate for all people with a disability and mental illness. In 2006, DASH and Advocacy Northwest joined forces to become Disability Advocacy NSW (DA) and gradually expanded to cover the Mid North Coast region.

Mid North Coast advocates found that the region was one of the few in NSW that did not have a community legal centre that could ensure disadvantaged people (including people with a disability) get fair access to justice. DA advocates worked over several years with local groups to research legal needs and gather relevant evidence to show that a community legal centre should be based on the Mid North Coast. In 2010 the Commonwealth and NSW governments offered funds to establish a community legal centre in Port Macquarie. Mid North Coast Community Legal (MNCCLC) Centre opened in 2011.

To reflect the diversity of the services it provided and the alliance between legal and social advocacy, Disability Advocacy NSW changed its name to Advocacy Law Alliance Inc. and registered the business names Mid North Coast Community Legal Centre and Disability Advocacy NSW.

Staff Conference Newcastle

In 2016 Disability Information and Advocacy Service (Bathurst) joined forces to become DA's new Central West region. About same time, DA opened a new office in Parramatta and Lower Blue Mountains to service the Sydney West region. DA also established offices in, Dubbo and Broken Hill to better service remote regional populations.

ALA has offices in Newcastle, Paramatta, Blue Mountains, Broken Hill, Dubbo, Taree, Port Macquarie (2), Tamworth, Armidale, Bathurst, Coffs Harbour (2), Taree and Armidale.

ALA receives funding from the Commonwealth Attorney Generals Department, Legal Aid, Commonwealth Department of Social Services and NSW Department of Community and Justice. ALA has also received grants from other sources.

ALA Governance

ALA needs people with the time and governance skills to oversee the organisation and encourages and welcomes people from its target groups to join the board. The Board is elected each year at the annual general meeting. However, the Board may also appoint new Board members to fill casual vacancies throughout the year.

Generally, the Board is made up of a balance of people from: the regions ALA covers, the target groups it assists and people with legal, financial and management skills. Orientation, support and ongoing governance training is provided for Board members.

As part of its commitment to good governance and high ethical standards the ALA Board have resolved to undergo police checks as do all staff and volunteers of the organisation.

Governance over distance

ALA currently covers much of NSW and has eleven offices across the State. To effectively meet on a regular basis the Board must use “zoom” meetings (web-conferencing). Therefore, to participate, a Board member must have access to a computer with a web camera and be able to readily communicate via email. Meetings can be attended in this way from home or office.

The Board usually meets face-to-face one or two times a year in one of ALA’s regional offices on a weekend, so occasional travel will be involved. The Board usually meets 6-7 times a year. Sometimes extra meetings are called.

Board Overview

The Service is an Incorporated Association. Its ABN is 93 984 383 421. It is governed by an elected Board of 10 members.

Office bearer positions

Chairperson, Deputy Chairperson, Treasurer and Secretary, along with 6 Board members.

Board Duties - Governance

The key responsibilities of the Board are to set the direction for the organisation, to monitor its performance and to maintain control of the organisation, ensuring that it stays on track according to agreed priorities and planned activities.

Delegation of Management

The day-to-day management of the organisation is delegated to the CEO (Chief Executive Officer who is a paid staff member) and is based on policies approved by the Board. The CEO reports back regularly to the Board.

Board Responsibilities

We ask that all prospective Board members read the document in this link before putting in an expression of interest.

The satisfaction of being a Board member

“Personal satisfaction” is the phrase that most commonly crops up when various Australian leaders and community organisation Board members are asked to articulate their experiences. Most agree that while outsiders may see their contribution as selfless, the benefits derived from the experience usually outweigh the sacrifices.

Making a difference. There can be few more satisfying experiences than being able to see your goals and vision – and those of the organisation you are representing – come to fruition in the form of successfully completed projects. Contributing to the achievement of something you really believe in brings a form of satisfaction that is unlikely to be equalled in other areas of your professional life. Recognising that you are making a significant difference to people’s lives and contributing to the betterment of the community is a fine reward indeed.

Gaining new knowledge. Becoming involved in a community organisation can open up whole new areas of interest, resulting in a greatly expanded appreciation for how community organisations are run and of the specific sector in which the organisation is operating. As a wise person once said, no knowledge is ever wasted.

Gaining new skills. Successfully negotiating the challenges of the community sector - those involving fundraising and advocacy, for example – can pose challenges quite distinct from those required in the commercial or government sectors. Learning how to overcome these challenges can allow Board members to develop an entirely different, and highly useful, set of skills. Meeting and working with other talented people can also lead to a valuable expansion of skills.

Expanding your networks. Most often people are invited to sit on a Board because of their particular skills or attributes – and taking a seat alongside them at the Board table can allow you to benefit from those attributes. Making connections through the development of relationships and friendships with other Board members can have long-lasting positive personal and professional implications.

Putting yourself in context. Often in the day-to-day grind of work and personal lives, it is easy to lose sight of what skills and expertise you actually have to offer the world. Joining the Board of a community organisation, and acknowledging your contribution to its success, can lead to a more finely tuned understanding of your own worth – and a realisation that what you have to say is just as important as anyone else.

Finding it’s not just about the bottom line. Many Board members find a passion and commitment that is unlike the search for shareholder returns in a company boardroom. The motivation to achieve a mission rather than just increase revenues can be very inspiring.

Being inspired. Most people know the buzz that can come from being part of an effective team. Working with like-minded, dedicated people, not for material gain but for the good of the cause, is another experience opened up to community group Board members. That passion, commitment and spirit of generosity can be difficult to find in other arenas.

Being included. Participating in the community that the Board represents also presents immense rewards. Whether you are working for a lost dog’s home, a sporting group, a church or a school, serving on the Board can put you in contact with people you may have not have otherwise encountered. Getting to know your stakeholders, watching them live and work and participate, can be a exhilarating as any other experience you are likely to have.

Please note that declaring a potential or perceived conflict of interest does not necessarily disqualify a Board Member. By declaring a potential conflict of interest the Service seeks to deal with such in a transparent manner.

From ALA's Policy this might include situations in where:

- close personal friends or family members are involved, such as decisions about employment, discipline or dismissal, service allocation or awarding of contracts*
- an individual or their close friends or family members may make a financial gain or gain some other form of advantage*
- an individual is involved with another organisation or offers services that are in a competitive relationship with our organisation and therefore may have access to commercially sensitive information, plans or financial information*
- an individual is bound by prior agreements or allegiances to other individuals or agencies that require them to act in the interests of that person or agency or to take a particular position on an issue.*
- Involvement in external activities – It is possible that Board Members may undertake volunteer or professional roles outside the organisation that potentially give rise to a conflict of interest, or a perception of conflict (e.g. Board Members undertaking consultancy work for other organisations or government agencies). As a result Service expects that all Board Members declare their involvement in external activities related to the work of the Service*
